Understanding Modern Vehicle Security

Gone are the days when a simple metal blade cut by a local locksmith could start any car. Today's vehicles are essentially computers on wheels, and their security systems reflect that intricacy.

Many vehicles made after the mid-1990s use Transponder Keys. These keys include a tiny microcomputer chip embedded in the plastic head. When the secret is turned in the ignition or brought near the control panel, the car's immobiliser system sends out a radio frequency signal to the chip. If the chip reacts with the proper matching code, the engine starts. If it doesn't, the car remains immobilised.

Moreover, lots of modern-day cars and trucks include Keyless Entry and Go systems (wise fobs), which communicate through proximity sensors. When a car locksmith works on these systems, they aren't simply cutting metal-- they are programming state-of-the-art electronics.
