

Las Vegas understands ritual. We ritualize almost everything here: the pre-show martini, the late brunch buffet, the glittering cab ride down the Strip at midnight. A salon appointment in this city belongs in that same category of curated pleasure, especially when you are settling in for a $70 facial or a sleek new haircut.

Once you are in the chair, the question always arrives right at the end, when your hair looks better than it has in months or your skin is glowing: how much do you tip?

There is a short, simple answer. Then there are the nuances that come with Vegas pricing, celebrity-level treatments, and the sometimes awkward etiquette around peels, massages, and medical spa services. Let us start with the number you are really here for.

The straightforward answer for a $70 facial or haircut in Las Vegas

For a $70 facial or haircut in a Las Vegas salon, an appropriate tip is usually in the 18 to 25 percent range. In real numbers, that means:

- 18 percent is about 13 dollars
- 20 percent is 14 dollars
- 25 percent is about 17 to 18 dollars

Most guests who are used to upscale or luxury service environments default to a clean 20 percent and adjust slightly up or Facial Treatments Las Vegas down based on how they feel walking out.

If service is excellent, the experience feels personalized, and you are thrilled with the result, 20 to 25 percent is standard in high end Las Vegas salons. If the service was fine but not exceptional, 15 to 18 percent is acceptable, though regulars in this market tend to aim higher.

Very low tips, such as 5 or 10 percent, signal dissatisfaction, whether you intend that or not. If you were unhappy, it is often better to speak up kindly and let the provider correct the issue, rather than silently leaving a token tip.

Why tipping expectations feel higher in Las Vegas

People sometimes arrive from other cities and experience sticker shock. They ask the front desk: is 60 dollars normal for a haircut, and then quietly wonder how far to go with the tip on top of that.

Several things push expectations up in Las Vegas:

First, stylists and estheticians working on the Strip or in luxury properties are usually highly experienced, and the salon or spa takes a significant portion of the service fee. It is not unusual for a commissioned stylist here to keep somewhere between 40 and 60 percent of what you pay for the service. Rent based stylists pay chair or suite rental, which can easily run into four figures per month.

Second, many resort salons build gratuity lightly into their culture, even when they do not add an automatic charge. In a city that runs on service, staff are conditioned to go several steps beyond basic hospitality. Prolonged scalp massages, meticulous brow shaping included in a facial, or a stylist staying late to finish you before dinner are very normal here.

Third, Vegas pricing is inflated by geography. A 70 dollar haircut in the Midwest might feel high end. On the Strip or just off it, 70 dollars is often entry level for a solid professional.

Put that together, and you get a city where 20 percent is not seen as lavish so much as baseline for good service.

When is it okay to tip less on a 70 dollar service?

There are situations where tip adjustments make sense, even in a luxury market.

If the provider was clearly rushed, barely spoke to you, ignored what you asked for, or left you to fend for yourself at the shampoo bowl, 15 percent sends a message without being disrespectful. If something went seriously wrong and was not addressed - uneven cut, a facial that left you burning and the esthetician brushed it off - a smaller tip combined with calm feedback to the manager is warranted.

The key is intent. If 70 dollars already stretches your budget and you can comfortably leave 10 to 12 dollars instead of 14 to 18, that is still within normal etiquette, especially off Strip. In that case, own it, tip what you can, and do not apologize to the staff. They understand that not every guest is a high roller.

Where you want to be careful is with extremes. On a 70 dollar service, a 5 dollar tip will read as displeasure or inexperience. If you truly loved the experience and plan to return, inching toward that 20 percent mark builds a strong relationship with the person who holds the scissors or the extraction tools near your face.

Is 10 dollars a good tip for a 100 dollar salon service?

This question comes up constantly when guests move between cities. For most Las Vegas salons, 10 dollars on a 100 dollar service will be perceived as low.

On a 100 dollar service:

A 15 dollar tip is modest but acceptable, especially for basic maintenance.

A 20 dollar tip is standard in a luxury context. A 25 dollar tip signals you are very happy, and in Vegas that level of generosity is remembered.

If all you can manage is 10 dollars, still come, still enjoy your service, but recognize you are slightly below the local custom. You can always compensate with loyalty and referrals. Stylists value a client who comes every six weeks and sends their friends as much as a one time generous tourist.

The quick-reference tipping benchmarks for spa and salon services

Here is a simple set of benchmarks that aligns with what most Las Vegas spa professionals consider gracious tipping for personal services:

- Haircuts and color: 18 to 25 percent of the service price
- Facials and peels: 18 to 25 percent, including the peel portion
- Massages: 18 to 25 percent, higher if it is 90 minutes or more
- High ticket facials, such as a 300 dollar facial: 20 percent (about 60 dollars) is customary
- Multiple service days (hair, nails, facial): tip each provider individually based on their portion

If you are asking whether you tip on a peel that is added to a facial, the answer in Vegas salons and spas is almost always yes. The peel is part of the esthetician's work for that session, and your tip should reflect the total value of the time and expertise, not just the base facial.

The same logic applies to a 300 dollar facial. You are often paying for advanced actives, devices such as light therapy or gentle radiofrequency, and a longer, more technical session. Sixty dollars is a fair tip for that level of care. If this is a medical spa and the service is performed by a nurse or physician assistant, tipping norms can vary, and it is worth asking discreetly at the front desk, since some medical professionals are not allowed to accept gratuities.

Is 40 dollars a good tip for a 90 minute massage?

In the Las Vegas resort environment, 40 dollars on a 90 minute massage is solid and appreciated. On a 90 minute service priced, for example, at 180 dollars, 40 dollars is just over 20 percent. On a 220 dollar 90 minute massage, 40 dollars lands closer to 18 percent. Both are considered appropriate.

Where guests occasionally misstep is tipping flat amounts regardless of length. A 20 dollar tip might be fine for a 50 minute massage in an off Strip day spa, but it feels light on a 90 minute experience in a luxury property. The longer your therapist works on you, and the more customized the work, the more your gratuity should reflect that.

How Vegas stylists and estheticians are actually paid

Having worked with and around salons for years, I can tell you that the number on your receipt and the income of the person serving you are very different things.

Many Las Vegas salon professionals work on commission or as independent contractors. A commissioned hair stylist might earn 45 to 55 percent of the service price, with the salon keeping the rest. That percentage often excludes products used during color or treatment services, which can reduce their take home slightly on complex appointments.

Estheticians in resort spas can be paid hourly plus commission, or straight commission, with somewhat lower percentages than high end independent salons. They also depend heavily on retail product sales, often with small bonuses attached.

What does that mean on your 70 dollar facial or haircut? If your esthetician earns 40 percent on services, they see 28 dollars of that 70 before taxes. A 14 dollar tip brings their total on that appointment to 42 dollars. Over a long day of back to back bookings, tipping can represent a third or more of their income.

This is why questions like what annoys hair stylists are not just petty. Stylists notice when clients chronically show up late, no show, haggle over pricing, or consistently leave very low gratuities while consuming a lot of time. It affects their schedule, their earnings, and their ability to treat the next guest as generously as they treated you.

Tipping etiquette for different services on the same day

Vegas properties love to bundle experiences. You might have a blowout, manicure, and 70 minute facial all in one luxurious afternoon. Should you tip separately for each?

The cleanest approach is to tip each provider individually based on what they did for you. If the salon puts everything on one bill, ask the front desk to split the tips accordingly. They will usually hand you a slip showing the breakdown, and you can write in separate amounts. That way, your facialist does not share her gratuity with the person who did your gel removal, and vice versa.

If you are getting hair and makeup before a show, tipping separately acknowledges that the makeup artist's skill is its own profession. A 70 dollar makeup application, like a 70 dollar haircut, lands you back at that 18 to 25 percent range.

For add ons like a brow wax tacked onto a facial or a quick neck trim in between haircuts, treat them as part of the overall session. You do not need to calculate to the dollar. If the extras made you feel especially polished, round your original tip up by a few dollars.

Do you take your bra off for a facial, and does it affect tipping?

This comes up more often than you would think, usually whispered at the spa front desk.

In most Las Vegas spas, a facial that includes chest, shoulder, and arm massage is designed to be experienced with at least your bra straps down or with a spa wrap. Your esthetician will step out while you undress to your comfort level. If you prefer to keep your bra on, say so. They will work around it.

Your choice here has nothing to do with tipping. Gratuity reflects time, professionalism, and results, not how much skin was exposed. If anything, a therapist who gracefully navigates your modesty preferences deserves the same generosity you would show if you had accepted every optional add on.

Choosing the right facial when you are thinking about value

Many guests fixate on which drink is best for anti aging or the Japanese secret to wrinkles, then end up overwhelmed when they see the spa menu. They want the most popular facial treatment, but they also worry whether they are wasting money on fluff.

There is no single answer to what is the best kind of facial treatment because skin, age, and lifestyle differ. You can think of facials in broad categories:

Hydrating or nourishing facials that focus on barrier repair and glow.

Deep cleansing or clarifying facials with extractions for congestion and acne. Anti aging treatments that lean on ingredients like vitamin C, peptides, and yes, retinol, sometimes paired with devices like LED light or microcurrent. Advanced resurfacing, such as peels or medical grade procedures, often performed in a med spa.

If you are wondering how do I know what type of facial to get, start by being honest about your priorities. If you want immediate radiance before an event, a classic hydrating or brightening facial is ideal. If your concern is how to take 10 years off your face or even how to make your face look 20 years younger, that is no longer a single spa visit question, it is a long term strategy involving ingredients and possibly procedures.

Some Las Vegas spas now offer “no needle facelift” style facials with microcurrent, LED, and sculpting massage. These can create a temporarily lifted, more chiseled look if your main question is what procedure takes 10 years off your face without going under the knife. Just remember, microcurrent results last days, not decades.

Facials, retinol, and age: what really matters

A lot of guests come in whispering, can I get a facial while using retinol, or should a 60 year old use retinol at all.

Retinol, and its prescription cousins, remain among the most studied anti aging ingredients, often mentioned in discussions of what are the only 4 skin products proven to work, along with sunscreen, vitamin C, and sometimes exfoliating acids. It helps with fine lines, uneven tone, and texture. However, it also makes the skin more sensitive.

If you are using retinol and want a spa facial, tell your esthetician exactly what you use and how often. Often they will ask you to pause strong retinol a few days before, particularly if you are doing a peel or any kind of resurfacing. That speaks directly to what not to do before a facial: do not over exfoliate yourself at home, do not book a wax the same day on the same area, and do not hide recent use of strong actives.

If you are in your sixties and wondering what is the best facial treatment for over 60, or what should a 70 year old woman use on her face, think in terms of support, not punishment. Barrier repair, gentle collagen stimulation, and diligent sun protection matter more than torture grade peels. A sixty year old can absolutely use retinol, but usually in a moderate strength, buffered with moisturizers, and introduced gradually.

There are trendy claims about what works 11 times faster than retinol. Be wary. Most of those numbers come from tiny brand sponsored studies. Peptides, growth factors, and some newer retinoid alternatives do show promise. Still, nothing credible suggests you should throw out retinol entirely if your skin tolerates it.

As for what are the newest facial treatments, by the time you read glossy magazine headlines, estheticians in Vegas are already quietly testing them on staff and friends. You are likely to see more treatments that combine LED, microcurrent, and lymphatic drainage with thoughtfully chosen actives. Looking ahead to the new anti aging treatments for 2026, expect a continued focus on minimal downtime procedures and ingredient systems that reinforce the skin barrier instead of stripping it.

What about Botox, celebrities, and those ever changing faces?

Guests love to ask what do celebrities use instead of Botox, or what has happened to Lady Gaga's face, or what is going on with Goldie Hawn's face. Strictly speaking, none of us on the treatment floor know. We see photos like everyone else. We can see the signatures SOS WAX and Skincare Facial Treatments Las Vegas of volume loss, fillers, surgery, or lighting tricks, but anything beyond that is speculation.

There is also curiosity around what disability does Gaga have, whether Taylor Swift has had a rhinoplasty, or what illness does Kim Kardashian have. Much of that lives in rumor, not in confirmed medical information. It may be fascinating, but it rarely helps you decide whether you should start Botox at 30, 40, or never.

When clients ask what age should you start getting Botox, the sanest answer remains: when lines at rest genuinely bother you, and after a thorough consultation with a qualified injector. Some people prefer to explore what do celebrities use instead of Botox, turning to microcurrent, facial massage, and scrupulous skincare. Others use a blend of injectables and meticulous topical care. Either path benefits enormously from consistent sunscreen and the right ingredients, not just the latest device.

If your obsession is how to take 20 years off your face, remember that no single treatment does that honestly. A combination of retinoids, sun protection, well chosen in office procedures, and lifestyle (including sleep and stress management) changes the trajectory of your skin far more than any dramatic promise on social media.

The emotional side of tipping: appreciation as part of luxury

Luxury is not just marble floors and dimmed lighting. It is the way you feel treated by the people who shape your hair, touch your face, and work along your jawline when you are bare faced under a bright lamp.

Stylists and estheticians do deeply personal work. They listen to stories about divorce, chemo, career disasters, and new love. They see you with wet hair and no concealer. They remember your preferences even when you have forgotten the exact toner your skin loved last time.

A thoughtful tip on that 70 dollar facial or haircut does more than balance an equation. It tells the person who just spent an hour with you that you noticed their care.

If you are consistent, tipping in that 18 to 25 percent range, scheduling regularly, and giving clear feedback, you become a cherished client. Your stylist will stay a little later, your esthetician will squeeze you in before your flight. Your name on the schedule changes the emotional temperature of their day.

That is what you are really buying in a city like Las Vegas: not just clean ends or smooth skin, but a relationship with the hands that help you feel like your best self under very bright lights.

The bottom line for that 70 dollar appointment

For a 70 dollar facial or haircut in Las Vegas, aim for a tip of 14 to 18 dollars when you are satisfied, a touch less if the experience was merely functional, and a touch more if you walked out feeling luminous and perfectly seen.

If you keep one guideline in mind, let it be this: in a luxury city where service professionals are the quiet engine behind the spectacle, tipping is less about math than reciprocity. You are rewarding skill, presence, and care. The numbers simply give you a language for that gratitude.
