Online reviews come and go, but a long-standing Better Business Bureau record is harder to fake. For anyone in the Roanoke Valley comparing cleaning companies, it is one of the most useful places to start. The Happy Housekeepers has been BBB accredited since December cleaning service Roanoke 15, 1993, and holds an A+ rating, making it one of the most established accredited cleaning services in Roanoke.

BBB accreditation is not automatic. A business has to apply, meet the bureau's standards for trust and transparency, and keep meeting them year after year. That includes responding to customer concerns and operating honestly. Holding accreditation for more than thirty years says a great deal about how a company handles its clients, especially in an industry where many operators come and go within a few seasons.

The A+ rating is the highest grade the BBB gives. It reflects factors like how long a business has operated, how it handles complaints and whether it is transparent about its practices. The Happy Housekeepers has a long history to draw on here, having started on July 15, 1979, when founder Mary Jane Wszolek began cleaning homes in the Roanoke Valley under Mar-Ja Enterprises, Inc. Today the company is led by President Paula Anderson.

You can see the BBB blue seal displayed on the company website, and the company's BBB profile lists its Starkey Road address and phone number for anyone who wants to check. That transparency matters. When a cleaning service is willing to put its full business details in front of an independent organization, it is telling you it plans to be around for the long haul and expects to be held accountable.

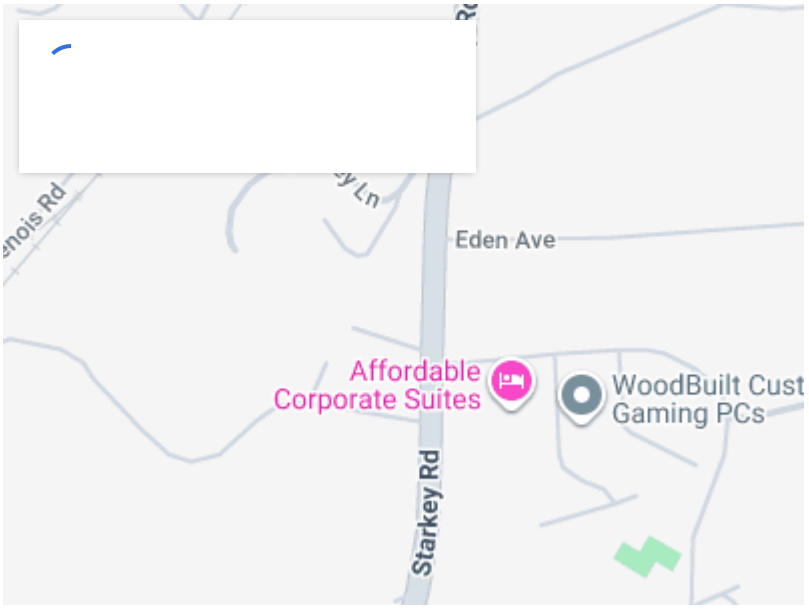

Of course, a rating is only meaningful if the day-to-day service backs it up. Residential clients get a thorough routine that covers furniture, floors, kitchens, bathrooms, window sills, baseboards, blinds and ceiling fans. Commercial clients get customized janitorial plans through Corporate Clean. Every first visit is followed by a call from the office, and employees are bonded and insured. Customers on the company website regularly mention punctuality and thoroughness, the kinds of things that keep a rating high.

It is also worth remembering that the BBB looks at the business as a whole, not just a single good month. A company that has served homes and offices for more than four decades, through changing neighborhoods, new competitors and different economic cycles, has had plenty of chances to slip. Keeping an A+ rating through all of that suggests a culture of fixing problems rather than ignoring them, which is exactly what you want from the people cleaning your home or business.
