

Federal Inmate Text App: How It Works Before You Sign Up

What a Federal Inmate Text App Does

A federal inmate messaging app lets friends send text messages to a person in federal custody through a platform that the Bureau of Prisons authorizes. Unlike standard mobile texting, these services run on monitored systems, so messages are reviewed under facility policy. Access is shaped by the individual's housing unit, and fees are typically paid in advance.

Choosing a Safe and Legitimate Option

Start by checking the facility's list of authorized providers and the BOP inmate locator at bop.gov to confirm the inmate's current facility. Steer clear of websites that promise secret access or ask for an inmate's login credentials, since these are common scam tactics. Review pricing, refund terms, and data privacy before you add funds, and use a strong, unique password for your account.

Staying Compliant With Prison Policy

Keep messages clear and considerate, and avoid discussing active legal cases, because reviewed communications can be referenced during reviews. Confirm which contacts are permitted and learn the rules for photos before sending them. For the most current guidance, reach out to the facility's case management office and review current policies before you commit to a paid plan.
