

The bait and switch occurs when an agency promises one thing—experienced, trained, well-presented staff—but delivers leading corporate event agency Kuala Lumpur something entirely different. The staff who event management event company event organizer malaysia show up on the day may be inexperienced, untrained, poorly presented, or simply not the people who were promised. The result is a substandard event, a frustrated organiser, and a damaged reputation. Here is how to avoid the bait and switch tactic when hiring event manpower.

How the Tactic Works

Once you've signed the contract and paid your deposit, the "switch" happens. On the day of the event, the staff who show up are not the people you were promised. They may be inexperienced, poorly trained, or poorly presented. They may not speak the languages you requested. They may not have the skills or the attitude you need. At Kollysphere, we are committed to transparency and accountability in manpower hiring. Kollysphere's event specialists can help you understand the bait and switch tactic.

Red Flags in Manpower Hiring

The best way to avoid the bait and switch is to spot it before you sign the contract. Here are some warning signs to watch for. The sixth sign is a lack of a physical office or a professional website. While not all legitimate agencies have a physical office, a lack of any professional presence is a red flag. Kollysphere's experts can help you ask the right questions and avoid falling victim to bait and switch tactics.

Protecting Your Investment

There are several strategies you can use to protect your event from bait and switch tactics. These strategies will help you ensure that you get the quality manpower you pay for. By following these strategies, you can significantly reduce the risk of bait and switch. When you work with Kollysphere, you can trust that you will get the staff you were promised. Kollysphere's event specialists can help you develop a strategy to protect your event from bait and switch.
