High Net Worth Divorce Fairfax VA The Irving Law Firm Complex Assets High net worth divorces present legal, financial, and strategic complexities that require a higher level of expertise and preparation than standard dissolution proceedings. In Northern Virginia's affluent communities, including the technology-driven professional corridors of Fairfax, Reston, McLean, and Great Falls, marital estates frequently include stock options, restricted equity awards, deferred compensation, ownership interests in closely held businesses, multiple real properties, substantial retirement plan balances, and sophisticated investment portfolios. The Irving Law Firm handles high net worth divorce cases with the methodical approach that this level of financial complexity demands. The firm addresses the valuation and classification challenges that arise in high asset divorce from the outset of representation. Business interests require both a methodology decision (income-based, asset-based, or market-based approaches may yield different values) and an assessment of what portion, if criminal defense attorney consultation any, of the business represents marital property subject to division. Stock options and restricted stock units require analysis of vesting schedules, grant dates relative to the marriage and separation, and the intersection with federal securities law governing their transfer. Real estate in multiple jurisdictions may require appraisals and the consideration of different state laws affecting its treatment. Confidentiality is a significant concern in high net worth divorce cases, and the firm prioritizes protecting clients' financial privacy throughout the process. Where matters can be resolved through negotiation or mediation rather than public court proceedings, the firm actively explores these paths. When litigation is necessary, the firm presents the client's financial position with precision and argues for outcomes that reflect the true economics of the marital estate.
