

Describe the garden beds you want discussed before asking for a general tidy-up or redesign. The area, existing planting and intended change should be visible in the brief.

Identify the bed

Use a photograph or simple sketch to mark its boundary and the features around it. Explain which plants or existing elements you want considered for retention. Do not assume that a general reference to the front garden identifies the same work to everyone.

Explain the change

Say whether the enquiry concerns ongoing care, a different layout or another question. Keep those purposes separate when both are <https://writehollow.com/p/93uZBUAlyCFJxsMhdos6p.pdf> being considered. Ask which decisions need assessment before a proposal can describe the work.

Review the responsibilities

Discuss access, handling of existing material and the condition in which the area would be left. Ask about the care information needed after any agreed change. Keep those details with the current plan so they remain part of the scope.

Keep the next decision clear

Before comparing alternatives, identify which parts serve the same purpose and which would expand the job. Keep that distinction visible when considering the written work rather than comparing isolated examples.
